Titusville Morning Herald. AMES The Bank Porter's Daughter.

A Perilous Adventure with Robbers. From the Argory. f CONCLUDED.

FCONCLUDED.]

When Martha had fully made up her mind that it was impossible for her to escape, she set about it calculating how long her imprisonment was likely to last. It was now about half past one, a.m., and at ten o'clock Will Trafford would be there to spond his Christmas sky at the bonk. If not set at liberty before that thue—and she could hardly hope to be so, seeing that the brights would require some time to get clear away after leaving the bank—she might calculate on being released on the arrival of her sweetheart. He twould require some time to make the supplied on duding his summons unanswered, an alarm would be relied, and flashly she, Martha, would would be relied, and flashly she, Martha, would turned to go. "Take my advice, and rest quiet ly. At such a time as this we do not sirek at trilles."

"Who can that woman be?" asked Martha of herself. "What a strange thing for a female to be mixed up with such an affair."

More dreary minute passed; how many she could not have told. I she was dreadfully cramped, and the cord by which she was tasted sended shing into very flesh. All ordinary thoughts were being gradually awallowed in a pain that with every minute was becoming more unbearable. It was all that she could be keep from crying aloud. She bit her lip in her agony, and mouned below her breath; but there was no one to hear her.

Buddenly, when her torture was the sharpest, there flished into her brain a thought as startling, so unexpected, that for a moment her every pain was deadlened in the rush of utter arror prise with which it overwheimed her. There had speedy mode of escape, but not a pain less one. Anything, but a painless one, indeed, but all one that must be earned out at all conditions. The first would soon be over. But she would not give herself the time to argue the point, lest her could for a few seconds almost breathfulse, trying to stendy his short of the man recalled her.

The pillar to which Martha was tied was with in a yard of the dock that had been broken open. Close to the edge of this deca was the upright gaspipe from which species the simil jet, still allight, of which mention his already been made by stretching out her arms Martha could reach this jet. She could do more than that, she could hold her wrists over it, and let the flume burn away the band by which they were fastened together, and her hands once at theirly, the rest would follow.

This was the method of escape that had fisshed ucross her brin, and she now infocceded to that Martha now began to glide on her dangerous errand. Fortunately, her dress was a dark one, and her feet were unshad. Het sole chance of safety lay he the fact of the three people below stairs being so intently occupied that they would neither see nor hear her; and Martha judged that they were so occupied, because for the lass few minutes, cunversation smoog themselves had almost estirely ceased. The grand crisis of their labors was evidently at hand. With her back and hands pressed closely to the wail, so to keep hersait within as small a space as possible, and with the akirts of her dress kept close about her, Marths began to move slowly down the stairs.

Her face was very white but filled with a fine resolution. From her present position the inmates of the cellar were not visible to her; but both her cyes and oars were painfully on the alert, and they told her that so far everything was safe. By an inch at a time, as interemed, and so slowly that her advance was almost imperceptible, Martha kept descending steadily. In all there were fifteen stairs to go down; she had counted them many a time; and as each onwould be related, and finally she, Martha, would be discovered and set at liberty. But eight thought and she fall there were fifteen sairs to go down; she lived and a half of imprisonment—and such imprisonment—was a long and deadful time to look forward to.

This thought was still to her head when the office, with the intention of secing that his prisoner was still safe. The readjustment of a knot or two salided her.

"You have been trying to escape, and you have been trying to escape, and you have been trying to escape, and you have found that you cannot," she said, as abstituted to go. "Take my salvice, and rest squietly. At such a time as this we do not strek at little."

Martha of imprisonment—and such imprisonment—and she felt that by so much had her danger become more imminent. The beating of her heart sounded so unnautrality out and strange in her own ears, that she was shall those in the cellar would hear it in the salid. The fainting resolution revived, and she felt that by so much had her danger become more imminent. The beating of her heart sounded so unnautrality of the salid and strange in her own ears, that she was shall those in the cellar would hear it moved onward ugain. Thirteen. Fourteen.

She was lust on the point of stooping to make the attempt when the woman inside the cellar police.

"You must do without me a minute or two, it is a many the common of the many prisoner." She set down her lamp, and had got so far on her way upstairs that putting out a thand Martha could have touched her dress, when the harsh woice of the man recalled her.

"You prisoner is quite safe," he said, "and I cannot spare you just now. You must hold the dight for a few minutes longer, I cannot get on without you."

The woman went back, and Martha breathed again. Now or never. Martha stooped and put out her hand with a fulck, stealthy movement, and felt the keys between her flugers. How to gather them and litt them off the ground without making the slightest noise? Even this difficulty was conquered at last. The hand holding the keys was drawn back into the shadow, and still there was no alarm.

The remainder of the bask seemed easy It was only to get back jundetected to the top of the stairs. She was going back slowly, but not as slowly as she hid come down, and had accomplished about one third of the return journey, when an exchantion trom one of the men be low told her that she had not an instant to low, and that ache had better make a rush for safety.

"The keys," Where we the keys? he extrumed, having trined around instinctively, so it were. "They were bere not flye minutes upon this apparation he stopped point blank in sheer amazement.

To this should be added a faithful collection of revenue, and etrict account to the Treasury of every dollar collected, and the greatest practicable retrench aim , but that should only be when a dollar obfigs ion to pay secures precisely the same sort of dollar to use now, and not before.

While the question o specie psyments is in aboyence, the prodent business man is careful about contracting dibts payable in the distant future. The nation should follow the same rule neoninged. The young men of the country, those who from the lr age must be its ruler, twenty live years benee, have a peculiar interest lu maintaining the national honor. The question of suffrage is one which is likely to agitate the public, so long as a pertion of the citizens of the nation are excluded from its privileges in any State. It seems to me very dealrable, the question should be settled now. I entertain the hope and express the desire that it may be settled by the ratification of the 15th article of amendment to the Constitution.

In conclusion, I ask patient forbearance towards one another throughout the land, and determined effort on the part of every citizen to do his share towards cementing a happy Union, and I sek the prayers of the sation to Almighty God in behalf of this consummation.

BOILERS.

The undersigned has the reclusive agency for selling BUE'S PATENT INJECTOR for Northwestern Pennsylvania. By the use of this ingenious appliance, the necessity of a heater and pump is obsisted, as it will heat and inject into abouter 5 to swenty-live galloms of water per mantie, seconding to the size of injector used. It can be exceeding to the size of injector used. It can be connected without difficulty and will not get not of order. It can be seen in operation as Hryan, Lillingham & Co's Shops in this city, and at the Monitor oil Works, Potroleym Co rice.

T. McCambridge, Esq. — Dear Sir — We save one of Samuel Rue & Co.'s patent injectors in use in our establishment for the last six nonths, and we take pleasure in saying that it gives entire satisfaction, and would recommend it to all parties. It is simple in its construction and its working is as easily understood as the common force pump, it never gets out of order
